con-quering and strife, we'd find among those stars a bet-ter life.

Up in the sky I watch them shine and won-der if I'll ev-er find a way to make them change their minds and fin-ally rea-lize that Kling-ons could be somuch more than all their ig-nor-ance and war. Still, this Kling-on's misunderstood.  I'm used to their rejection, their in insults and contempt, just because I'm not like them: un-learned, unkind, unkempt. Sometimes I lay awake at night and wish that I could be someone who could fit in, someone...
